VMware Background Check Follow Up

Dear Dinesh,

As discussed, part of VMware's hiring process involves a background check. You will receive an email from a member of our HR Team requesting you complete an employment application and consent form.

- The application will be used by our background check vendor and is a collection tool for the following components- address, education and previous employment. Should we need to collect any criminal history, you will have an opportunity to disclose this information on the employment application. If you reside in a country where criminal record checks are not authorized, you will clearly see this on the application and you will not have to answer any questions regarding criminal history.
- The consent form is the form we need that authorizes us to perform a background check. You will need to provide your date of birth and your government identification number. This information is stored securely and meets all of the global data privacy standards.
- If you do not wish for VMware to verify your current employer, please designate this on the application in the field provided.

Email contacts, please check your SPAM or Junk folder to ensure no email is lost. A delay in your response could delay the hiring process. Here are more details about what you may expect:

- Should you receive an email from an HR team member requesting additional information, the emails will all contain @vmware.com. In addition, we have an email alias that the HR team may use - bgchecksapac@vmware.com.
- The background check vendor, First Advantage, may reach out to you via email. This email would come from customerservice@fadv.com or Clientservices.request@fadv.com. Typically copies, they may request of your transcripts or diploma, a contact number for a previous employer (not current employer if you do not want VMware to verify your current employer), or other.
- If you are at all concerned about any contact made by First Advantage, please contact bgchecksapac@vmware.com and inform the HR team that you received an email or call and the HR team will assist you with obtaining the necessary information that is needed to proceed with the background check process.

Note: For optimal performance when completing the forms we recommend the use of Internet Explorer 9, Internet Explorer 10, Chrome or Mozilla FireFox.

Sincerely,
Sadananda P
